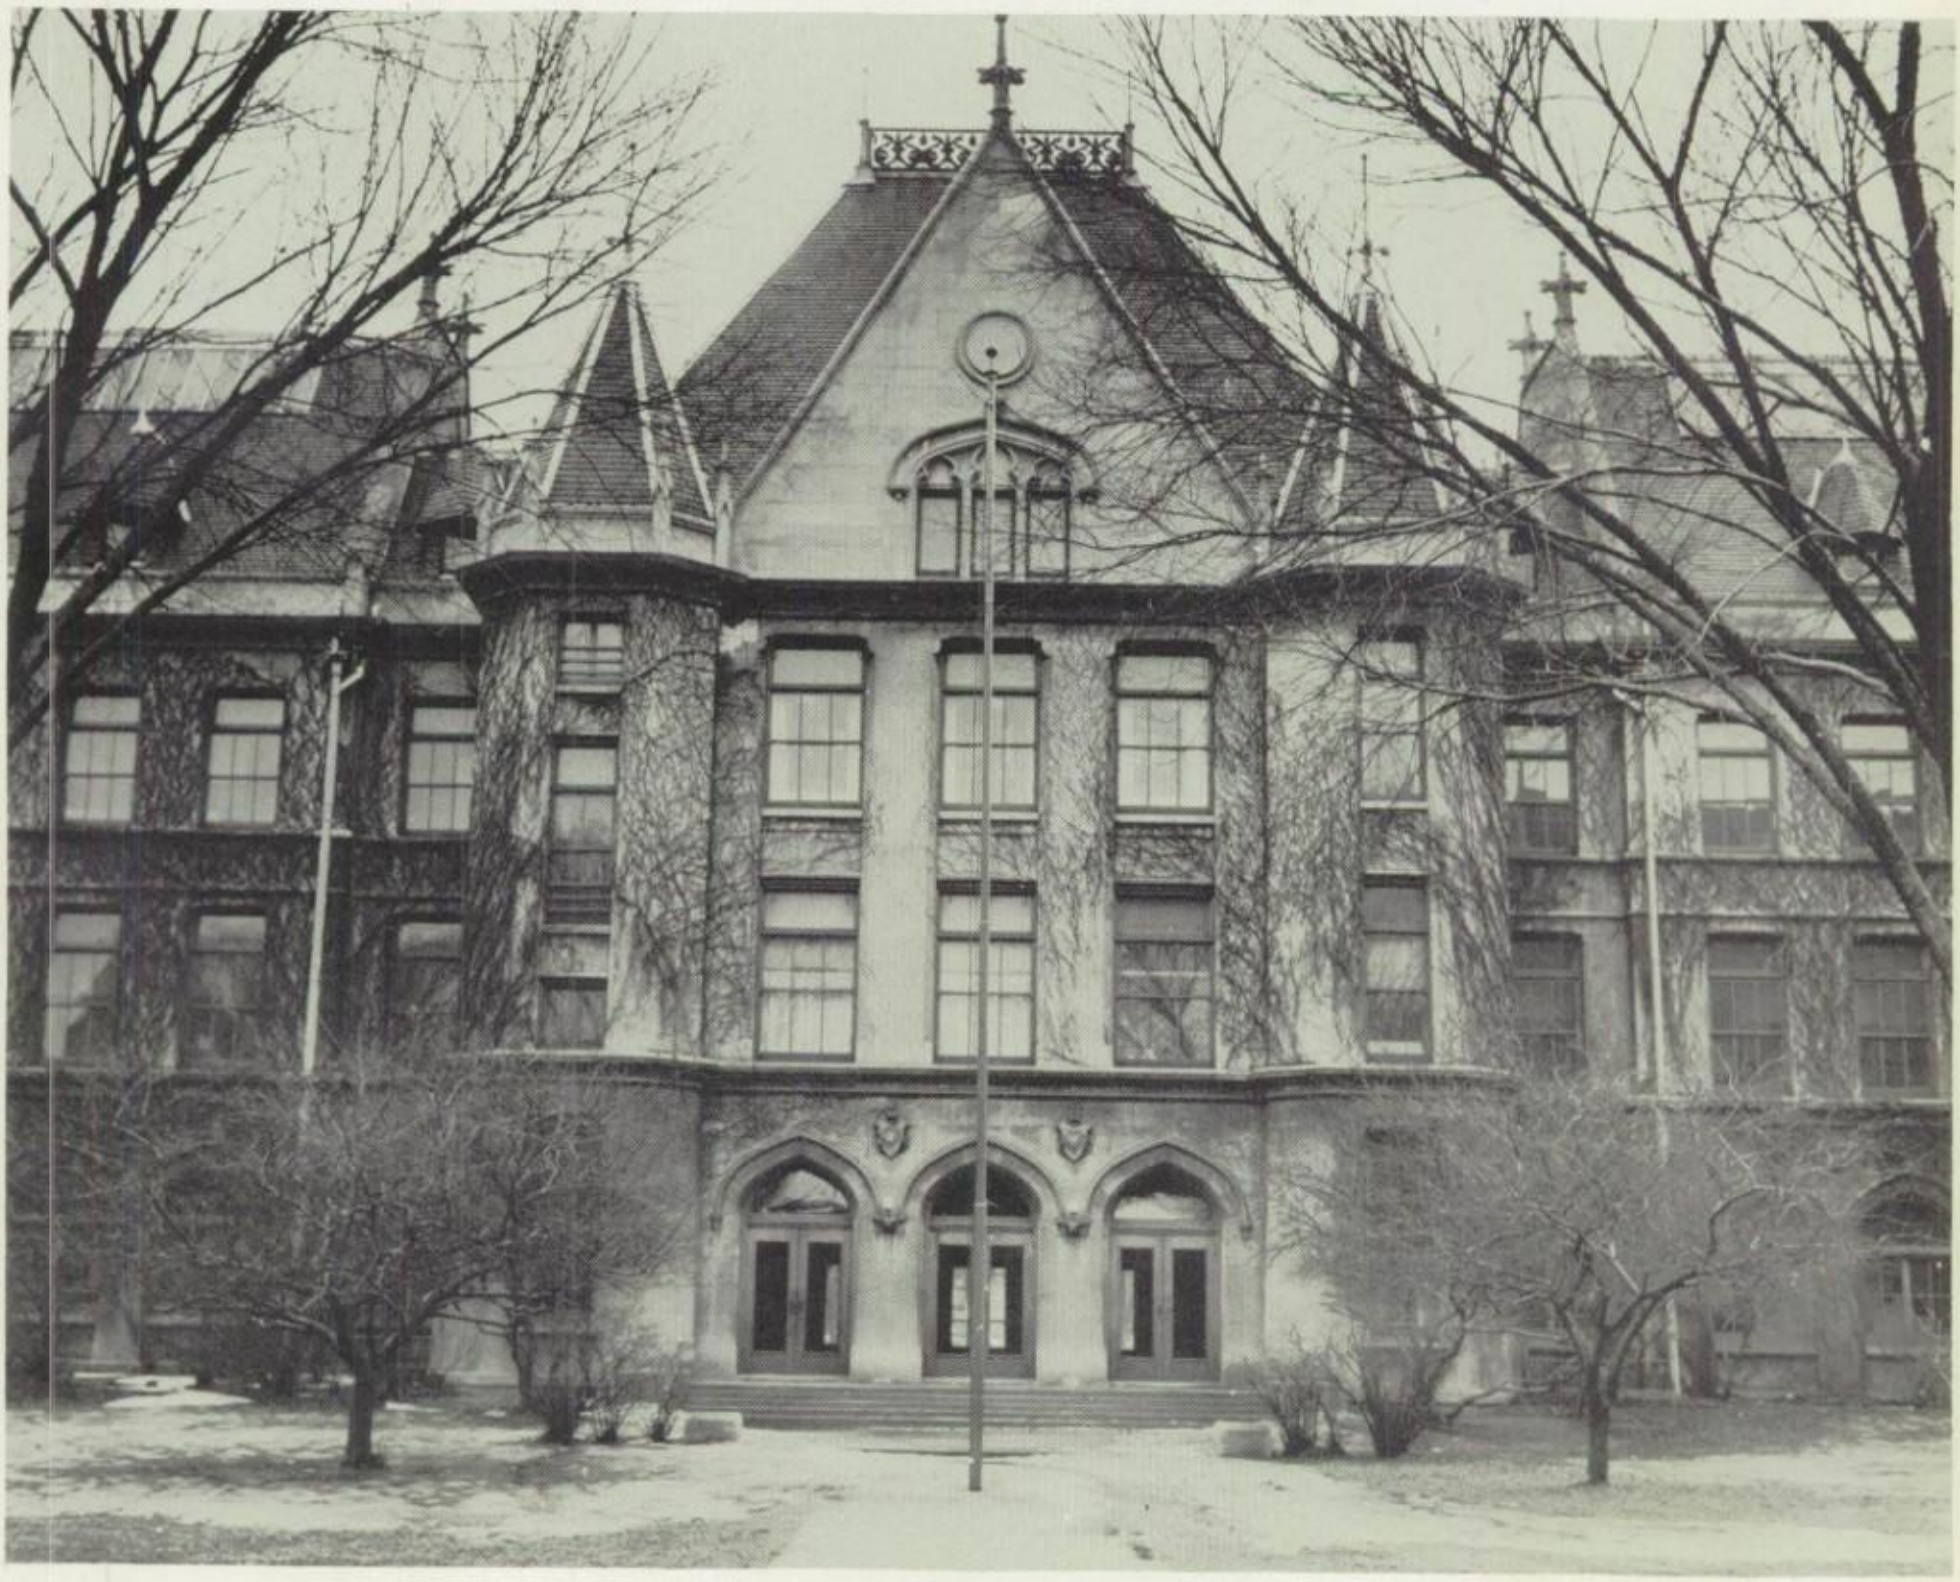
what is u-high ?

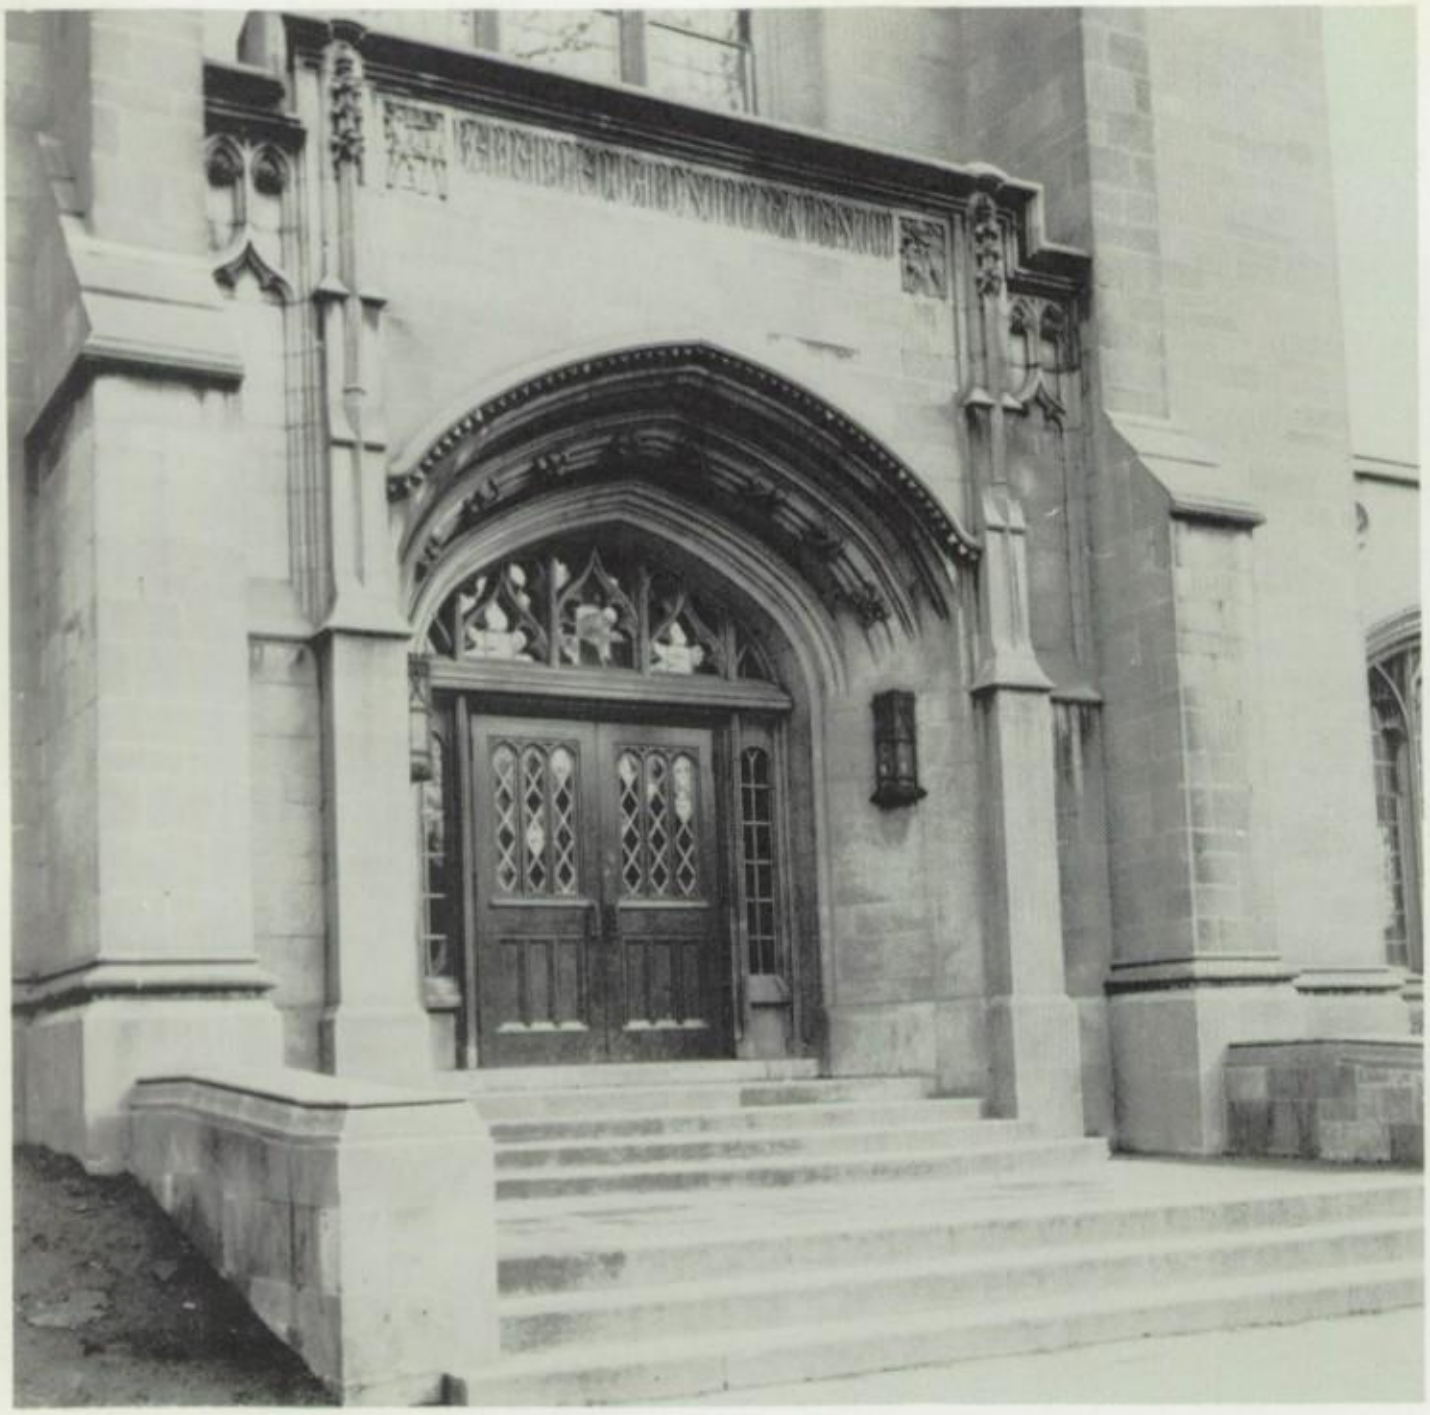
it is staring out the window on a sunny spring day.

it is reaching the end of an early morning trip through pouring rain. it is the nearly forgotten routine of a late september.



it is sitting on the bench near the bookstore and watching, seeing nothing. it is pushing and shoving in the locker room when the day is done. it is running to catch the train when the doctor's appointment is for 3:15.

it is the relief of seeing a movie screen and projector upon entering a classroom. it is the anxiety of a final test in the most troublesome subject and the boredom of someone else's difficulty in that least troublesome subject. it is the pleasure of finding a group of friends at a lunchroom table where there is room for one more.



it is crossing the street to run, jump, or dive. it is the joy of scoring just when the gym teacher is watching.

it is worrying about college. it is fearing and fooling our teachers.
it is growing. it is learning.

it is leaving happily at the end of the day

this year the student council executive committe made very good use of homeroom period. instead of spending thursday mornings in their homerooms, the officers had a party in mr. faldet's office. the council this year moved up one notch from blaine 214 and competed with the parents' association, the janitors, and miss helmkamp for belfield 159a. another improvement in the meetings themselves was the use of name cards for all council members. these were particularly useful for those representatives who could not remember their own names. the majority, whose memory did serve them, could point to impressive achievements, including a bigger and more profitable bazaarnival, excellent stomp-inns, and an improved system of homeroom reporting.

at u-high, the way of the transgressor may not be excessively hard, but it is clearly marked with road directions furnished by the student board. with the energetic mr. tenenberg as chief traffic engineer, it has this year led more than 200 wayward travelers, via a detour to mr. ohm's office, onto the path of righteousness to sin no more. thanks to its efforts, traffic in the halls of u-high moves at moderate, purposeful speed with no racing and pedestrian hot-rodding. and the bubbles in its fountains are without benefit of bubble gum.

dispossessed by the english and sosh departments, homeless for a second year, nonetheless the girls' club again demonstrated its hardy vitality by the variety of activities and functions which it sponsored. under the leadership of kit kollenberg, it sponsored the mother-father-daughter party, the christmas toy drive, and many open houses. its supreme skill in the obscure and little-known art of getting along with boys was demonstrated in its successful co-sponsorship with the boys' club of the fall social and canteen.

boys will be boys, and since time immemorial they have gathered together in backyard shacks and treehouses to form clubs and secret societies. at u-high, the boys' club has combined these architectural traditions most appropriately-in gym temp. the club this year sponsored the christmas fund drive, a halloween party and the boys' club dance, and co-sponsored canteen, the fall social, and an open house with the girls' club-all this despite the distraction of the continuing threat that gym temp would collapse.

this weary group, as motley a crew as ever manned an editorship, had the job of making the s.s. yearbook see-worthy. their many weeks of scurrying, scribbling, picture-snapping, cutting, and pasting produced this record of an eventful year at u-high, which they hope you will value and enjoy.

to jo banks for senior portraits and candids, and for his patience and forbearance.
to bud holland for building shots and activities, faculty, and senior division pages, and for his kindliness and indulgence.
to gerry adler and john northrop for their excellent photography.
to hoppy asher and david collier for their devotion to our cause.
to seymour shelist, raundi nelson and public letter & litho service for technical advice and assistance.
to maxwell house coffee, lipton's tea, and jay's potato chips for sustenance.

the midway this year has rebelled against its inaccurate classification as a student organization. only the non-reader would dare to say that it is organized.

just as the sun-times exposed orville hodge, the midway has shocked its readers with the great radiator stink and has brought to light the bubble gum plot against our water fountains. only in smaller ventures has it failed; gym temp has been made a symbol of the futility of journalistic crusades.
the thought which has guided it through the year has been:
"to err is typographical, to correct pedantic."

all u-high students are familiar with the massive greystone building located across the street from our beloved belfield hall. but, alas, not all u-highers are aware of what goes on there after the final bell finishes reverberating down the musty halls. ah, but there are some rare u-high students who are lucky enough to realize that this is the time to obtain relaxation, team spirit, (no, it's not vic tanney's) and personal benefits in many extra-curricular sports.

jimmie shanties this year, although it has been plagued by many vacancies, gave a number of very good performances. its spring concert was on a rather well worn field, but had a new twist in choreography.
most of the vacancies were due to seniors, with only five holding out. a possible explanation has been given that these absences were due to an overload of physics homework.

the swimming team this year rose to that formerly inconceivable plateau of first place in the p. s. l. this was only accomplished by the driving force behind all swim meets: coach kearns. although his whip is worn rather thin, kearns is positive that he will conquer all comers next year also, and add still another trophy to his growing collection.
